PROGRAM

Accessibility means that people with and without disabilities can interact with websites, mobile applications, and other technologies. Accessibility advocacy is global, and the EU and Spain have the legal foundation to support an inclusive digital world. In the United States a collaborative legal strategy known as Structured Negotiation has been used by blind advocates, other people with disabilities, and lawyers to improve accessibility with private corporations, the government sector, education, and more. All without lawsuits, all with significant involvement of the disability community. In the 21st century, digital inclusion is fundamental to participation in society and cooperative legal strategies can help.

Join us for a participatory workshop with U.S. disability rights lawyer Lainey Feingold. Lainey has worked with the disability community and some of the largest corporations in the United States on closing the digital divide by making the digital world accessible. Her book on the collaborative process she and her colleagues have developed – Structured Negotiation, A Winning Alternative to Lawsuits, was published by the American Bar Association. Lainey is an international speaker and trainer as well as a negotiator and a lawyer. More on her website at LFLegal.com or her Twitter account @LFLegal
